

PORTRAIT OF AN ASSHOLE

PORTRAIT OF AN ASSHOLE – Natasha Bajc /nəˈtæʃə baɪts/

The Trap & The Uncomfortable Refusal Visceral, playful, and uncompromisingly accusatory. The work operates as a trap: refined, dignified aesthetics mask crude male anatomy. The shock hits your body before language—you feel the confrontation before you analyze it, though theory deepens the hit.

Warholian Flattening Saturation and populist landscape abstraction serve a dual purpose: they lure the viewer with familiar graphic charm while aggressively flattening authority. By flattening the image, the work flattens the hierarchy—exposing patriarchal power as raw, level, and unheroic anatomy.

Inverting the Gaze A radical rejection of the deeply ingrained Male Gaze. Turning the patriarchal lens back on its source, the mirror-backed apparatus draws your reflection directly into the frame. You are not a passive observer judging from a safe distance; your presence completes the assemblage. You are inside the accusation.
